Good and Bad design

Good Interface

I chose this spoon because, even though it seems like a regular spoon, without any special feature in sight, if we look closer we see that it bends in the very end.

The purpose of this little curve is to prevent the spoon from falling into the soup, which I believe all of us find a little bit annoying.

Bad Interface

This is my house's frontdoor lock. I've lived here since I can remember and the said lock never revealed to be a problem to me. Until one day, I was leaving with a friend of mine and he was the one to open the door. And he couldn't open it. It was at that moment I realized he was rotating the handle clockwise to open it, which makes a lot of sense, but the handle opens the door anticlockwise, something that I noticed to be misleading, therefore I chose this as my example for a bad interface.
